

Gas can strapped into child safety seat next to unsafe child

Priorities, priorities. When a woman was pulled over during a routine traffic stop in Colorado, an officer couldn't help but notice that a 14-year-old and a toddler were lolling about unbuckled in the car, while a gas can had been carefully strapped into the child safety seat.

Gas cans, when in a vehicle, should be in the trunk, secured from sliding around, and removed ASAP. In a collision, a gas can becomes a potential flame thrower dousing everything and then only a spark will turn the contacted surfaces into a fiery hell.

Pretty much everyone agrees that children are still more valuable than gasoline, regardless of the always-rising cost of a gallon!

Safety First!
Not Last!

Buckle up everyone – Gas Cans in the trunk & removed ASAP!
