EXPECT THE UNEXPECTED

A few years ago, my girlfriend and I decided to take a trip during spring break to a nice coastal town in Oregon named Seaside. We made the arrangements, checked the weather and packed accordingly. Little did we know that this trip would teach us the importance of always planning for the unexpected.

STICKER SHOCK

Most of us have probably perused a local flea market or street-side vendor, looking for a great deal. When searching for these values, however, one must remember to weigh the proposed savings against the potential risk. I found this out first hand.

WEATHERING THE STORM

I'll think twice about trying to push into weather, especially when there isn't a real need to do so. While I am glad to have experienced flying in this type of situation, I hope to never have to go through it again.
